ROLE OF PUBLICATION ETHICS IN SOCIO - LEGAL RESEARCH

SUBIN THOMAS

ABSTRACT

Socio – legal research is systematic way of understanding the interconnection between legal principles and the society. Legal researchers should carry out their research in an ethical manner. They must be aware of ethical guidelines related to publication of the research works. Publication ethics is the set of principles that refers to the standards of publication and scholarly research outputs. It makes clear distinction between proper and improper way of doing scientific research works. It is referred to the basic concept of ethics based on morality in research publication. Legal Researchers must be sincere to their research work and publication of it. They must be aware of the basic principles of publication ethics. They need to be honest with publication of their works. Genuine publication can give credibility and authenticity to the research works. Researcher himself should take adequate precaution to avoid misconducts in research. Observance of publication ethics in socio – legal research provides genuineness, transparency and legitimacy to the research. The role of publication ethics and ethical responsibilities of legal researchers have been discussed with the purpose of upholding the credibility and objectivity of the research works and publications.

JUDICIAL INTERVENTION IN ARBITRATION PROCEEDINGS: AN ANALYTICAL STUDY

Neenu Anna Ninan, Christ (Deemed to be University), Bangalore

ABSTRACT

Every legal system aspires to provide justice in a fair, expedient, rational, and economic manner. Due to the numerous numbers of cases pending before the judiciary, speedy justice is not been served. Thus, for the purpose of delivering justice to people in a speedy manner, a rapid and simple technique of conflict settlement is required. One of the options for resolving the issue is Arbitration. It is one of the most important methods of dispute mechanism, where an out-of-court settlement is done to help the judiciary in reducing their burdens and ensuring fairness, equity and justice to the people.

The purpose of this research paper is to critically analyse the various aspects regarding Judicial Intervention in the arbitration proceedings. It firstly gives a thorough understanding of the concepts of “speedy justice” and “judicial intervention” in the arbitration proceedings. The paper evaluates the role of judicial intervention before, during and after the arbitration proceedings. In addition, the paper further examines the advantages and disadvantages in respect of judicial intervention in arbitration proceedings.

THE ROLE OF WTO IN PROTECTING THE ENVIRONMENT: A CRITICAL ANALYSIS

ABSTRACT

Rapid industrialization which happened in the 1960s was considered to be marked the beginning of the relationship between trade and environmental concerns. During that time, industrialization led to higher pollution levels and caused resource depletion. Environmental problems like global warming are becoming increasingly prevalent in the world. Free trade policies allow nations to import and export commodities from other nations, that place the least value on environmental protection.

The primary goal of the World Trade Organisation is to foster and liberalize trade. On the other hand, WTO also has a part to play in preserving the environment. Sustainable development, environmental protection, and its preservation is acknowledged as the core objectives in the preamble of the Marrakesh Agreement, which established the WTO. The Jurisprudence that has developed in resolving trade and environment disputes under the General agreement on trade and tariff and WTO Dispute settlement process is reviewed further in order to draw up the role of the WTO.

The role of WTO in preserving the environment is explained by the relationship between change and the environment. For the purpose of defining the WTO's role in environmental safety, four different aspects are identified and analyzed in this study which are; the financial concept of global change, the environmental response to global change, GATT and WTO jurisprudence on conflicts between change and environmental policies, and discussions of GATT and WTO operating events on change and surroundings issues. These elements would help to define the WTO's role and function in protecting the environment. Although the primary motive of WTO is to promote trade and open market, under some circumstances, nations are allowed to impose trade restrictions to safeguard their environment.

The fundamental goal of this study is to examine the connection between trade and the environment. This paper also analyses the role of the World Trade Organisation in protecting and preserving the environment. Further, the research also evaluates whether the WTO is properly balancing environmental issues and concerns with trade liberalization.

1. INTRODUCTION

The research problems in social sciences could be identified to be of two types. First are of empirical nature, which can be answered, based on relevant and adequate facts. The second type of problems is those that are theoretical and interpretative in nature. There may be lot of empirical data available but we do not know how to make sense of them and to establish the interrelationships. We in this paper are dealing with both types of problems. The first problem is whether increased economic growth in terms of Gross domestic product (GDP) has any degree of relevance in accelerating the overall growth of such economies beyond increasing agricultural productivity. The second one is the problem of the understanding the interrelationships between the two.

In this section, we have focused on the first problem. The concept of economic development has undergone radical changes in the recent past and growth has come to acquire importance in development thinking. In fact, traditional economic analysis has often held that the process of development involves changes in per capita income caused by the achievements in high levels of economic growth. Economic growth in the form of increased GDP has, in fact been recognized as the most crucial pre-requisite for reducing poverty in poor countries by providing employment and income, particularly among poor nations where agriculture is still main occupation.

The real increase in per capita income and changes in the social and political institutions are necessary to support an expansion of the national economy, which in turn accelerates growth and expand employment opportunities in an economy. The need to ensure adequate growth in employment opportunities for providing Productive employment for the continually growing labour force is widely regarded as one of the most important problems facing the state.

While the two concepts of GDP growth and well-being represent different approaches to economic development, they are linked together by the fact that the broad-based concept of well-being provides the necessary conditions that enable to contribute to GDP growth and

Biodiversity is the variation amongst living organisms from different sources including terrestrial, marine and the desert eco-system and the ecological complexes of which they are a part. India is one of the most diverse nation in the world. It ranked ninth in terms of plants species richness .India is equally diverse in its faunal wealth. However diversity is depleting at a drastic rate and various programmes on bio-diversity are being launched to conserve nature. Article 47, 48A , 51 A(g), 253,246,32,226 of the constitution speaks about protecting the environment . Furthermore the article discusses how the judiciary and international authorities have contributed towards establishing a strong environmental jurisprudence both in domestic and international environmental laws.
