Moot problem

Infodus. v. Larsun

1. The Union of Tenjiku, a constitutional republic, spans much of South Asia and governs a remarkably diverse population, comprising thousands of ethnic groups and hundreds of languages. According to United Nations estimates, Tenjiku became the world's most populous country in 2023.
2. Tenjiku Technology is investing approximately $54.5 billion, the highest in the Asia-Pacific region. In the financial year 2023-24, Tenjiku granted a record 103,057 patents, reflecting a remarkable surge in innovation and intellectual property activity.
3. Infodus Pvt. Ltd., a pioneering tech startup in Tenjiku, has developed Verdi, an advanced AI-driven platform that curates content with precision using cutting-edge algorithms. Founded by Dr. Anya Sharma, the company seeks to revolutionize online content discovery, delivering highly personalized and accurate recommendations across diverse digital platforms.
4. At the heart of Verdi lies Neural Resonance Mapping (NRM), a groundbreaking feature that analyzes user behavior with exceptional precision. Infodus has secured patents for NRM's architecture and specialized functions, safeguarding its innovation against replication in the competitive tech landscape.
5. Infodus secured a patent for Verdi while safeguarding its proprietary algorithmic methodologies, known as Cognitive Pattern Recognition (CPR), as trade secrets. These sophisticated algorithms transform raw user data into intricate interest profiles, enabling deeply personalized content recommendations tailored to individual preferences.
6. Larsun, a non-profit organization led by Marcus Vance, voiced concerns over the implications of Verdi technology. They argued that it fostered "filter bubbles" and subtly manipulated user preferences, potentially undermining open discourse and reinforcing biased information consumption. Moreover, they cautioned that the system's data processing capabilities could expose sensitive user details, including identity, location, browsing history, and past interactions.
7. In response to these concerns, Larsun initiated Verdi X, a project aimed at fostering transparency and user empowerment. Their objective was to develop a streamlined version of Verdi, enabling users to comprehend how content is curated and offering them the ability to customize the algorithms shaping their online experiences.
8. While developing Verdi X, Larsun took meticulous care to avoid replicating any patented elements of Infodus. Their team conducted extensive research, ensuring the project was built upon publicly available data and widely accepted algorithmic principles rather than proprietary technology.

9. Larsun launched Verdi X alongside a comprehensive report titled "The Algorithmic Cage," which examined the risks of personalized content curation. Through this transparent initiative, they sought to enlighten the public on the profound influence of algorithms in shaping daily information consumption.

10. In response to Larsun's actions, Infodus issued a formal notice, alleging that Verdi X infringed upon its patents and misappropriated proprietary trade secrets. They contended that, despite modifications, Verdi X remained fundamentally rooted in the core principles of Verdi, constituting an unlawful derivation of their technology.

11. Infodus asserted that Larsun's reverse engineering of their technology amounted to unfair competition, jeopardizing their market position. They emphasized that safeguarding their intellectual property was essential to fostering continued innovation and sustaining investment in technological advancements within Tenjiku.

12. Conversely, Larsun maintained that their reverse engineering efforts were lawful and fell within the bounds of fair use. They argued that their approach was transformative, designed to enhance digital literacy and empower users by demystifying the inner workings of content algorithms.

13. Larsun maintained that Verdi X was architecturally distinct from Verdi, adhering to the principles of novelty and obviousness in patentability. They argued that any similarities stemmed from universal algorithmic principles rather than direct replication. Furthermore, they emphasized their commitment to user empowerment and unrestricted access to information, advocating for transparency as a fundamental pillar of a democratic society.

14. This dispute escalated as both companies claimed violations of their fundamental and intellectual property rights. Infodus filed a lawsuit in the High Court of Quilon, but the court dismissed the petition, ruling that no infringement had occurred. Undeterred, Infodus proceeded to file a special leave petition in the Supreme Court of Tenjiku.

15. AURICORE, a private company, filed a Public Interest Litigation (PIL) under Article 32, arguing that AI-driven software must not infringe on individual privacy, as it poses significant risks of identity breaches and data misuse. Recognizing the interconnected nature of these issues, the Supreme Court of Tenjiku decided, on its own motion, to consolidate the cases for a comprehensive hearing.

Note: The laws of Tenjiku are pari materia to those of the Union of India, reflecting a shared legal framework and underlying principles.
