MOOT PROPOSITION

Apex Records Inc. & Ors. ... v. Union of Aspasia, Anderson Company Technologies Inc. & Ors. ...

1. The Republic of Aspasia is a sovereign democratic republic governed by a written Constitution guaranteeing freedom of speech and expression, subject to reasonable restrictions based on constitutional morality, public order, decency, and dignity. In recent years, the Government of Aspasia has adopted a restrained policy approach to the notion of “modesty”, under which allegations of vulgarity or obscenity unsupported by objective legal standards are discouraged and treated as legally unsustainable. This approach reflects the State’s attempt to balance technological innovation with fundamental rights..
2. In commemoration of the 75th Year of the Republic, the Union Government organised a national cultural programme featuring a synchronised drone display accompanied by music generated entirely through artificial intelligence. For this purpose, the Government licensed an AI-generated musical composition titled “Lost Recording / Last Smile”, produced through an AI platform known as “Del Luna”, developed and operated by Anderson Company Technologies Inc. (“Anderson”). Anderson is incorporated and headquartered in the State of Saturn, from where the Del Luna system was conceived, trained, deployed, and commercially operated.
3. Del Luna was presented as a generative AI system capable of autonomously composing music by analysing large datasets of existing sound recordings, lyrics, and musical patterns. Anderson maintained that the system relied on statistical correlations rather than reproducing any specific copyrighted work. The AI-generated composition was broadcast during the national celebrations and released simultaneously on digital streaming platforms, radio networks, and social media.
4. Shortly thereafter, Apex Records Inc. (“Apex”), a major music label, objected to the broadcast, alleging that Lost Recording was substantially similar to a well-known musical work titled “Ethos of Soul”, authored in 2020 by Mr. Jackson, an internationally recognised lyricist and performer. Ethos of Soul had been initially released in the State of Starlit. Its wider distribution across other States was delayed by approximately two months due to an internal ownership and licensing dispute among the rights-holding entities. Apex contended that this delay did not amount to abandonment of rights or dedication to the public domain.

5. According to Apex, the melodic structure, rhythmic patterns, and overall auditory impression of Lost Recording closely resembled Ethos of Soul, such that an average listener could identify the earlier work. Apex alleged that the AI-generated composition amounted to unlawful adaptation and substantial copying, constituting infringement under Section 51 of the Copyright Act, 1957, and not falling within the fair dealing exceptions under Section 52.

6. Apex further alleged that Anderson trained Del Luna on vast quantities of copyrighted sound recordings and associated metadata without authorisation. It was claimed that such training involved unauthorised processing of personal data embedded in sound recordings, including performer identifiers and voice attributes, in violation of the Digital Personal Data Protection Act, 2023. Anderson was also accused of failing to comply with intermediary and due diligence obligations under the Information Technology Act, 2000

7. During this period, Mr. Baskin, an independent digital composer, engaged with the Del Luna platform and claimed to have developed an original composition using AI-generated inputs. It was alleged that the AI output relied upon by Baskin was indirectly derived from Mr. Jackson's work, and that Baskin attempted to obtain a licence despite lacking proper authorisation from the concerned composer. Baskin had previously been associated with projects alleged to involve unauthorised adaptations, though such allegations had not resulted in conclusive findings.

8. Subsequently, AI-generated voice attributes and stylistic elements associated with Mr. Jackson were allegedly provided to Baskin as part of an AI-generated composition. Baskin modified the work by adding new lyrics alleged to be misogynistic and derogatory, and released the altered version commercially under his own name. He claimed exclusive copyright ownership, asserting that AI-generated works lacked human authorship and that his modifications created an independent work.

9. Both the original AI-generated song and the altered version were widely disseminated through public performances and broadcasts, including in theatres, transport hubs, educational institutions, and public transit systems. Objections were raised by civil society organisations and women's groups, alleging that the altered lyrics undermined the dignity of women and contributed to social disharmony. Reports of protests and concerns regarding public order were placed on record.

10. One women's rights organisation instituted proceedings in the State of Walmart, asserting that its members were exposed to the altered song while travelling on a passenger train from Saturn to Starlit, when the song was broadcast over the Walmart station radio during a scheduled halt. The organisation sought registration of a First Information Report under Sections 292 and 509 of the Indian Penal Code, alleging obscenity and insult to the modesty of women.

11. Multiple proceedings were initiated across different jurisdictions. Mr. Jackson filed a civil suit alleging copyright infringement, misuse of artistic identity, and violation of moral rights under Section 57 of the Copyright Act. Apex instituted independent commercial and civil proceedings seeking injunctions and damages for infringement and defamation. Public interest groups filed criminal complaints and writ petitions alleging police inaction and seeking enforcement of statutory and constitutional obligations. Allegations were also raised against digital intermediaries for failure to exercise due diligence under the IT Act and related rules.

12. The Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology issued directions to digital intermediaries to remove the impugned song in the interest of public morality and decency. Anderson challenged the order before the High Court, contending that it violated Article 19(1)(a) of the Constitution and amounted to impermissible restraint on expression. The Union Government defended the action under Article 19(2), citing public order, constitutional morality, and the dignity of women.

13. Apex issued cease-and-desist notices on the sixteenth day following the initial broadcast and subsequently filed civil proceedings seeking injunctions and damages under the relevant law, and, in the alternative, for civil defamation. In preliminary findings, the District Court and the Commercial Court observed that mere offensiveness was insufficient to establish obscenity. Applying the Hicklin test, the courts held that the material did not demonstrate a tendency to deprave or corrupt susceptible minds, and interim relief was declined.

14. In a separate proceeding, Mr. Baskin was sued for alleged copying of a foreign musical work. Objections based on res judicata were raised but rejected on the ground that the causes of action and factual circumstances were distinct. Despite several adjournments sought on personal grounds, the suit was dismissed by the District Court and the Commercial Court during the COVID-era disruptions

15. It was subsequently noted that several cases involving AI-generated songs with allegedly improper or uncensored lyrics were pending before courts across multiple States, resulting in inconsistent approaches. To address the emerging legal vacuum and ensure uniformity, the Supreme Court of Aspasia took suo motu cognisance and ordered consolidation of related matters to evolve a uniform framework governing AI-generated music, data protection, censorship standards, and intermediary liability.

16. It is clarified that the Constitution of Aspasia is pari materia with the Constitution of India, and that Indian constitutional principles, statutory interpretations, and judicial precedents may be relied upon as persuasive authority.

17. Since all the matters are interconnected to each other the Supreme court has decided to club the matter and has posted it for final hearing .
